There were 150 members of the Washington Schroeder's bond.

Thomas J. Edwards, Grand Tiler.

There were 150 members of the Washington Light Infantry corps, 350 Knights Templar, and fifty members of the grand lodge, officers and members, in line. The corps appeared in full dress uniforms, wearing their shakes, and as usual presented a fine appearance. They marched up the avenue in company fronts, and the Sir Knights six and eight abreast. When passing the President the bands played "Hall to the Chief," the military and Sir Knights gave a marching salue, and and Sir Knights gave a marching salute, and most of the Sir Knights removed their bats. The President acknowledged the salute by removing his beaver.

The Sir Knights looked and marched splendidly, and were the recipients of many com-plimentary remarks along the line of parade. Upon arriving at the site of the armory, the procession came to an open order, through which the grand lodge officers passed to the stand, the members of the subordinate lodges removing their hats and the Washington Light infantry corps presenting arms. After the grand lodge officers had passed upon the stand, they were followed by the military, who eccupied the east portion of the first story superstructure. The Richmend commandery took up a position in the basement. INCIDENTS.

The gavel used by the grand master during the ceremony was used by Gen. Washington in laying the cornerstone of the capitol building, Sept. 18, 1793. It is the preperty of Potomac lodge, No. 3, of Georgetown.

During the most solemn part of the services the weight of a large number of colored boys on an adjoining tin roof caused a section of an old chimney to fall with a report like that of an old smooth-bore cannon.

The contractor for the erection of the armory told a REPUBLICAN reporter last evening that 2,250,000 bricks and sixty tons of brown stone would be required to complete the structure.

The workmen on the building were treated to liquid and solid refreshments provious to the caremony by Mr. J. M. Perreard, who sent a card to them inscribed, "A bumper for the success of the grand undertaking."

Several members of the Grand Army of the Republie, who were present, said the ceremony would probably have to be repeated for the Veteraus before a great while, as they are talking seriously of erecting an armory building.

The lemonade and peanut venders were on hand in force and did a rushing business.

Col. Wm. G. Moore, commander of the Light Infantry battalion, received many than a russaring of his congratulations on the time appearance of his men and the manner in which work on the armory is being pushed.

Asgension DAY SERVICES.

Yesterday was Ascension day, as known in the feast services of the church. Last evening Washington commandery, D. C., No. 1, and Richmond, Va., commandery No. 2, headed by the Marine band, proceeded to the Protestant Episcopal church of the Ascension, Eav. Dr. Elliot, rector. After the manifritual services, a sermon having special reference to the Masonic order was delivered by Chaplain Lindsay, of the house of representatives. ASSCINSION DAY SERVICES.

The floral decorations, arranged by Mrs. The horar decomposition of the chancel presented a parterne of fragrant ruses, lilles, and other exotics. The chair, fermerly used by the late likhop Pinkney, when restor of the church, was draped with pusple satin and surmounted by a crown of | mansion and temb

GRADUATION GAYETIES.

Commencement Eve at the Spencerian Business Cellege.

Lincoln Hall Filled With Friends of the Sixty-Three Graduates.

The Addresses Listened to Attentively and the Speakers Showered With Bouquets, Remarks by Prof. and Mrs. Spencey and Commissioner Edmonds.

Prof. and Mrs. H. C. Spencer sat on a red velvet sofa on the stage of Lincoln hall last night and smiled on the 2,000 people who had come to enjoy the commencement exercises of the Spencerian college. Mrs. Spencer were a white satin dress and the professor a dress suit, a smile, and a white rose on his were a white satin dress and the professor a dress suit, a smile, and a white rose on his lapel. On either side and behind them begined the fresh smiling faces of the sixty-three graduates. There were also seated on the stage Commissioner Edmonds, J. H. Bryant, Rev. Dr. McElroy, Mr. W. L. Parsens, A. S. Frant, B. H. Warner, president of the school beard, Gen. and Mrs. Mussey, Gen. Exto., commissioner of education; W. H. Sadler, president of the Baltimore Business college; the E. M. Reynolds, Superintendent of Schools W. Son., and Prof. E. C. Townsend.

The deer sine of the Baltimore Business college; the E. M. Reynolds, Superintendent of Schools W. Son., and Prof. E. C. Townsend.

The deer sine of the ball were profuse and elegant. Under each gas jet a finational abield was hung, while sexpended above the stage and anditorium were large baskets of flowers. The front of the stage was banded by floral tributes in many designs, whose fragrance pervaded the entire hall. There were flowers of every shape and color, and through the foliage of the tropical plants in neat wicker baskets, which lined the edge of the stage, could be seen the scarlet uniforms and flashing instruments of the Marine band. Bunting and lace in graceful folds, hung above and about the stage in every available space. Almost overy lady who entered the hall had some floral favor for her graduating friends, and a number of the stage and gave each graduate one, and sometimes many bouquets. In the audience, which filled every inch of available space, were seated many prominent persons, and a large number were unable to gain admission to the hall.

At 7:35 o'clock Prof. Sousa waved his baton, and the strains of "King Midas' filled the hall. A few minutes later the orchestra interpreted in an excellent manner the principal airs from the "Beggar Student."

The sixty-three graduates, headed by their instructors, waiked upon the stage with firm step to the strains of "King Midas' filled the hall. A few minutes later the orchestra principal airs from the Rev. Dr. Paret invoked the Divine blessing on the graduates and audience, when all had been seated, and the orchestra performed the "Irish Patrol," which they repeated in re-

"Irish Patrol," which they repeated in response to the applause.

The welcome which the salutatory of Mr. Fred. C. Squires offered extended a cordial invitation to all, and his tribute to his teachers was a glowing one. The marked and scholarly manner in which he chose his words evinced careful training.

The ladies' salutatory, by Miss Claudia Estelle Fearson, was delivered in a clear. Teach yeles and her delivery was natural and Estelle Fearson, was delivered in a clear-fresh voice, and her delivery was natural and graceful.

The bright and crisp definition of "Lazi-ness," by William H. Chandle, evoked loud laughter, and his witty utterances were original and nicely couched. He thought that the failure of Grant & Ward was due to the laxiness of Grant Canation not being the laziness of Gen. Grant, in not being the laziness of Gen. Grant, in how comp versed in business.

The "Forge unit the Forest," a descriptive fantasia, was played so well by the band that the audience demanded a repetition, which the audience demanded a repetition, which was given.

Mr. John Heisy, in a very scholarly essay on "Mine and Thine," told how easy education could be secured, and demonstrated the power of economy, for which he was loudly applauded and received a number of handsome floral tributes.

Mr. William Legacy repeated a counct sale. Mr. William Jaeger repeated a cornet solo

Mr. William Jaeger repeated a cornet solo three times in response to the loud applause. The gentlemen's valedictory was delivered by Mr. Zera D. Patterson in a clear, well-intoned voice. His eulogy of the school and teachers was effective, and his farewell graceful and touching.

Miss Katio F. Brown. a pretty girl, with red and white roses at her corsage, and a sweet, clear voice, delivered the ladies' valedictory, which was refined and carefully studied.

"Hush and Follow," a xylophone solo, was demanded and repeated three times, and the artist who performed it was loaded with

Mrs. Spencer looked radiantly happy when she turned her face on the graduates and audience, and the words she spoke extended good advice and instruction to the former and a warm greeting to the latter. She spoke of her pupils affectionately, and regretted that they were to leave her. "There is not one of them, however," she said, "but that can take care of his or herself, and they all go forth with a bright prospect."

Prof. Spencer was pround of his graduates, and he said so. The college, he stated, was organized eighteen year ago, and 507 persons have graduated from it, many of whom were in the hall. He believed that they were all fitted for useful lives, and could maintain good advice and instruction to the former and in the hall. He believed that they were all fitted for useful lives, and could maintain independence through the instructions they had secured in the college.

"The Blue and Gray," a descriptive poem, was nicely rendered by the morning class, and leadily applauded.

Prof. Spencer then said that suffrage was abolished in the district twelve years ago, but that the president of the board of commissioners was present and would address the boys and award diplomas.

Commissioner Edmonds smiled when introduced, and put his hands behind him. He troduced, and put his hands behind him. He said that from the elequent and scholarly essays delivered he could but see that smart essays delivered he could but see that smart men and women were made even outside of classical schools. He complimented the college, and dwelt on the wonderful progress of education in the past few years. He had begun to think, he said, that business colleges were as necessary as telephones and bicycles. His speech was crisp and witty, and he was frequently interrupted by laughter and applause. He terrupted by laughter and applause. He then presented diplomas to the graduates, after which the orchestra played the "Lion's Chase. The graduates were as follows:
